From: Miami by way of Cuba.

Art: Digital.

Showing At: InterContinental Miami's 19-story exterior LED display and lobby, December 7-10. 100 Chopin Plaza, Miami; icmiamihotel.com.

What's it like to have a 200-foot canvas? "Taking over the InterContinental's digital canvas will be a career highlight, and it just so happens to be in my backyard. I'm thrilled that my fellow Miamians and visitors will get to experience this firsthand during Art Basel, and I'm hopeful that art lovers will step inside the hotel to experience a series of my generative art pieces, which will be in the lobby."

Tell us about that work: "The Miami moon and tidal phases will be displayed in real time on a large indoor LED tower, while the background is in a generative cycle that will not repeat in approximately 400,000 years. Alongside there will be a frame displaying an assortment of other generative work, and the video screens will display videos of my older generative work."

And outside? "I hope to display on the outside marquee a generative clock where the viewer can read the time of day, and see the tides and moon of Miami. Every hour on the hour, a different one-minute animation plays, to remind you of the hour."

InterContinental Miami General Manager Robert Hill on Castillo: "As our city has matured into global arts destination, and the InterContinental Miami has emerged as downtown's premier arts hotel, it's only fitting that we are partnering with a local artist like Claudio to showcase his beautiful and thought-provoking pieces on Miami's biggest canvas during Art Basel."
